Discover Liverpool's diverse immigrant communities

Welcome to Walk the World! This walk in Liverpool is one of 20 in different parts of the UK. Each walk explores how the 206 participating nations in the London 2012 Olympic and Paralympic Games have been part of the UK's history for many centuries. Along the routes you will discover evidence of how many Olympic and Paralympic countries that have shaped our towns and cities.

A walk through Liverpool is a journey across the world. Over the last few centuries, Liverpool has welcomed migrants from China, Germany, Nigeria, Sweden, Jamaica, Greece, Kenya, Ireland, Pakistan, the Ukraine and many other countries.

These people have made their home in Liverpool. Some came in search of work in the city's docks and industries. Others fled from persecution in their home countries. Some disembarked from ships at Liverpool and chose to settle here rather than continue their journey across the Atlantic.

This walk explores the imprint of immigrants on the city in the form of religious buildings, community associations and shops. You will discover some unique architecture, beautiful sculptures and unexpected monuments. Be prepared for some surprises!

1. Welcome to Liverpool

Lime Street station

Welcome to Liverpool! We are in one of the major cities of northern England with a population of just under half a million. But Liverpool's people are tremendously diverse. They include Britain's oldest Black African community and Europe's oldest Chinese community. Liverpool was also home to one of the earliest mosques in Britain and has the largest Chinese arch outside China. Over the last two centuries, Liverpool has attracted economic and social migrants from across the world. People who settled here brought with them their different cultures, religious beliefs, food and languages. Today Liverpool is a multi-cultural melting pot.

This walk takes in 18 sights that reveal the links between Liverpool and some of the 206 Olympic and Paralympic Nations. These international connections tell a story of how different immigrant communities have shaped the city. We have found links to over 70 different participating nations but we'd love to hear from you if you find any others on or near the route. The walk will also give you some ideas of how to look for international links near your home.

The walk is about 3 miles long. We start at Lime Street Station, then climb up to the two cathedrals, visit the district of Toxteth and finish at St Thomas' Memorial Gardens on the edge of the city centre shopping district. There are a number of busy roads to cross so please take care and always use pedestrian crossings. We hope you enjoy the walk.

Directions 1 - From the front of Lime Street Station, turn left along Lime Street, staying on the left hand pavement. Immediately after the Britannia Adelphi Hotel, turn left up Brownlow Hill. It is quite steep so don't rush. Stop when you reach the junction with Trowbridge Street.

2. The Welsh Streets

Trowbridge Street

Our first stop is halfway up the hill at Trowbridge Street. Trowbridge is an area in Cardiff, the capital city of Wales. As we walked up the hill you might have spotted another road on the left called Ranelagh Street. This is named after a village in North Wales. So what are these Welsh names doing in Liverpool?

The answer lies in Liverpool's closeness to North Wales. Although they didn't come as far as some of the other immigrant communities that we shall hear about later in this walk, Welsh people were one of Liverpool's first major immigrant communities.

By the early 1800s, one in ten people in Liverpool was Welsh. Many worked in the docks, others worked on the Leeds and Liverpool Canal, and others in the building construction industry. In fact, there were so many Welsh people here that an area of Toxteth, south of the city centre, is known as 'the Welsh Streets' because the houses were made by and for Welsh workers. These streets also have Welsh names.

Trowbridge Street and 'the Welsh Streets' are good examples of road names providing international links. Why not find out if any of the streets where you live have international connections?

The Welsh community here in Liverpool built their own chapels where they could worship in their own language. The Welsh were mostly Protestants and at one point there were more than 50 Welsh chapels in Liverpool. Wales also provided Liverpool with people. As you walk around the city today, look out for the large number of red brick buildings. A lot of these red bricks came from a place called Ruabon, near Wrexham in Wales. We will see one of these buildings further up the hill – the Victoria Building. It is the original building of Liverpool University. In fact, this very building is the origin of the term 'redbrick university'.

Country links - Wales

Directions 2 - Continue up Brownlow Hill. Cross over to the right when you reach the back of the Metropolitan Cathedral. Go up the steps to the cathedral plaza. There is a good view of the Victoria Building across the road. Continue round to the cathedral's front entrance. To avoid the steps - continue up Brownlow Hill a short way to the cathedral car park and follow the paths through the cathedral gardens.

3. The Mersey Funnel

Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral

The official name of this building is the Metropolitan Cathedral Church of Christ the King. This is usually shortened to Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral. The design is rather unusual for a cathedral, don't you think? Many locals call it the Mersey Funnel or Paddy's Wigwam. This last nickname also gives us a clue about who it was built for.

The cathedral was built for a particular immigrant community – the Irish. After the Potato Famine of the 1840s in Ireland, around two million Irish immigrants came to Liverpool.

By 1851, a quarter of Liverpool's population was of Irish descent. These Irish settlers brought their strong Catholic faith. As Liverpool's Irish population grew, plans were drawn up to build a Catholic cathedral in the city but it didn't become a reality for many decades.

The original design was drawn up in the 1930s by Sir Edwin Lutyens. It was going to be the second largest cathedral in the world. But building was stopped before even the crypt was finished because the project was considered too extravagant and costly. So what you can see is a scaled-down and different design by Sir Frederick Gibberd. Construction work began in 1962 and took five years. It is made of concrete with a cladding of Portland stone.

Although the cathedral was built largely for the Irish community, there is a range of other international links inside to other countries competing in the Olympic and Paralympic Games. We will explore some of these on our next stop.

Country links - Ireland

Directions 3 - Go inside the front entrance of the cathedral and stop by the circular seated area in front of the altar.

4. Marble, cloth and bronze

Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral

Inside churches, cathedrals and other religious buildings you can often find a wealth of connections to other countries; through saints and mortals, memorials and monuments, building materials and architects or decorative features and art work. So if you want to find out about the connections between where you live and other countries, religious buildings are fantastic places to explore. Here in Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral, we can find some interesting examples.

Look at the main altar. This is made from white marble from Skopje in current-day Macedonia.

Liverpool Metropolitan Cathedral altar and baldachin
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

Above the altar, the unusual metal structure shaped a bit like a crown is a baldachin. The term comes from the Italian baldacchino and describes a canopy that protects and highlights the altar. Baldachin was originally a type of fine cloth made in Baghdad, which is in present-day Iraq.

Religious buildings often contain pieces by artists inspired or commissioned to decorate the interior. We can see some in the small chapels around the main sanctuary. For example, in the Chapel of Unity is a bronze water fountain by Italian sculptor Virginio Ciminaghi and a mosaic by the Hungarian artist Georg Mayer-Marton. The Chapel of Unity itself used to be named the Chapel of Thomas Aquinas after the Italian saint. Also look for a statue of the Peruvian saint Martin de Porres by Peruvian artist Isabel Benavides.

Country links - Hungary, Iraq, Italy, Macedonia, Peru

Directions 4 - When you are ready, leave the cathedral and go down the main steps or the path from the front entrance. Cross safely at the junction in front of the cathedral and go onto the left hand side of Hope Street. Stop when you reach the Philharmonic Hall.

5. Sweet harmonies

The Philharmonic Hall

Liverpool's most famous musicians were, of course, The Beatles. But Liverpool was an international music centre long before the 1960s. In fact, the city is home to the second-oldest professional symphony orchestra in Britain.

The Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra was founded in 1840 and is based here at the Philharmonic Hall. The Orchestra and the Hall have their origins in the Philharmonic Society, which was founded to present classical music concerts for the city's wealthy merchants. The Hall we can see today, complete with golden Greek lyres on the walls, was built in the 1930s after the original building was destroyed by fire.

By that time, the Liverpool Philharmonic already had an international reputation and had featured many overseas artistes. Notable conductors and composers who have performed at the Hall include the Germans Charles Hallé, Clara Schumann, Max Bruch and Wilhelm Furtwängler; Russian composers Sergei Rachmaninoff and Serge Koussevitzky; French-born Pierre Monteux and the Hungarian-American George Szell.

Notable musicians who have appeared here include Australian soprano Dame Nellie Melba, Austrian violinist Fritz Kreisler, Catalan cellist Pablo Casals, Ukrainian-born pianist Benno Moiseiwitsch, and Russian-born violinist Yehudi Menuhin. Pianist and composer Ignacy Jan Paderewski appeared here before becoming Polish Prime Minister!

The Liverpool Philharmonic has also employed several principal conductors from overseas, including Marek Janowski from Poland, Czechs Libor Pesek and Petr Altrichter, and the American Gerard Schwarz. The current chief conductor of the orchestra, Vasily Petrenko, is Russian.

Inside the entrance lobby, a memorial records members of the Philharmonic Society who were hired to play in the band on RMS Titanic. They died sadly as the famous ship sunk on its maiden voyage off Nova Scotia in Canada.

Directions 5 - Continue along Hope Street to the junction with Mount Street on the right hand side. Stop by the piles of luggage on the pavement.

6. International baggage

A Case History sculpture

Here on the corner of Hope Street and Mount Street are what look like piles of discarded luggage. This collection of cases, trunks and bags are all made from concrete. This is a public art work. Pieces like this have become increasingly obvious on the streets of Liverpool, especially since the city became the European Capital of Culture for 2008. In fact, after London, Liverpool is the British city with the second most sculptures per head of population!

Part of 'A case history'
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

This sculpture is called 'A case history'. It was made in 1998 by John King. Look around the bags and cases for bronze labels on some of them.

They feature the names of famous Liverpoolians with connections to Hope Street and the nearby area. Many of them were associated with countries around the world. Look out for Paul McCartney's name on a case with a New York label. Another interesting name to look for is Josephine Butler. She was a Victorian social reformer who fought for women's rights and opposed slavery. She often travelled through Europe in her campaigns, notably to Switzerland and Italy.

Also look for the name Kwok Fong. He was a Chinese sailor born in 1882. He arrived in Liverpool in the 1900s on a Blue Funnel ship. Known as 'Uncle Fong' he helped many Chinese migrants settle in the city and founded one of Liverpool's first Chinese restaurants. As well as the Irish community we heard about earlier, Liverpool has a significant Chinese population. We'll find out why later in the walk.

Directions 6 - Continue along Hope Street then turn left into Canning Street. At the junction with Bedford Street South, stop outside a small church set back from the road.

7. Sailors and sugar refiners

Deutsche Kirche Liverpool (Liverpool German Church)

Here is another religious building designed for one of Liverpool's immigrant communities. This is the Deutsche Kirche Liverpool or Liverpool German Church. There has been a church on this site since the 1850s, though the building you can see today was built in the early 1960s. The original congregation were nineteenth century German sailors. According to the story, a local priest stumbled across one of their prayer meetings held in a disused ship on the River Mersey.

Liverpool German Church
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

Take a look at the church's design. There are no elaborate towers or spires. Instead the square and simple style is typical of a Lutheran church.

Lutherans are a Protestant denomination, widespread in Germany and Scandinavia. They follow Martin Luther, a sixteenth-century German priest. Luther challenged the authority of the Pope and Roman Catholic teachings. He lived a simple lifestyle that rejected material wealth.

Liverpool's German community was at its height in the 1880s. Many worked in sugar refining. Raw sugar cane was brought into the port of Liverpool from the Caribbean and it was processed here ready for distribution and export. Sugar refining was hot, dangerous and physically demanding work. English and Irish workers refused to do it, so willing German immigrants stepped in.

The hours were long but there were benefits – good pay and free beer to replace the body moisture lost in the terrific heat! In the 1851 census, there were 44 German-born sugar workers in Liverpool. Refiners recruited more skilled workers from Germany, particularly from the Hamburg area, and by 1881, there were around 200 German-born sugar workers here. Eighty years later, The Beatles made some of their early appearances in Hamburg nightclubs.

Liverpool's German population shrank during the First World War as many were suspected of spying and deported. The exodus even included Carl Bernard Bartels. He was the German architect who designed the famous Liver Birds that sit on top of the Liver Building. But Liverpool retains strong links with Germany. As part of reconciliation after the Second World War, Liverpool was twinned with the city of Cologne. If you want to look for links near you to countries competing in the Olympic and Paralympic Games, why not find out if your town or city is twinned?

Directions 7 - Turn right and go down Bedford Street South. At Upper Parliament Street, turn right again and cross over at the traffic lights at the junction with Princes Road. Stop by a white memorial set in the wall.

8. The lady with the lamp

Florence Nightingale memorial

In the nineteenth century, Liverpool became the principal port in Britain. As we have already heard, the city attracted various immigrant communities who were drawn to guaranteed employment in the docks and various industries. But for these ordinary people, the quality of life was not good. Many did dangerous and back-breaking work. They lived in overcrowded and insanitary housing. Ill health was commonplace, diseases were rife. Life expectancy in 1861 was just 30 years.

One person who worked to improve the quality of life was the nurse Florence Nightingale. This memorial, set in the wall of the former Queen Victoria District Nursing Association building, records her efforts in Liverpool.

Florence Nightingale is probably best known for her work overseas when she was a volunteer nurse caring for soldiers wounded in the Crimean War. She served in Scutari in modern-day Turkey. The carving in the centre of the memorial depicts her tending for a fallen soldier.

After she returned to Britain, she collected evidence about deaths during the war and concluded that most soldiers died because of poor living conditions. From then onwards, she was an advocate of sanitary living conditions and the sanitary design of hospitals. In Britain, she worked tirelessly to promote public health and hygiene and set up training schools for nurses. The Liverpool Queen Victoria District Nursing Association – right here – was one of these schools. She also helped to establish the Liverpool Royal Infirmary and Liverpool Workhouse Infirmary.

Her work certainly made a distinct and lasting impact on the lives of Liverpool's poor immigrant communities. This memorial was erected in 1913, three years after Florence's death, as a public sign of gratitude for her work in the city. Today Florence Nightingale Hospital on Park Road is named after her.

Country links - Turkey

Directions 8 - From the memorial turn into Princes Road, take a moment to read the inscription on the front of the Nursing Association building. Continue a short way along along the left hand side of the road and stop outside Princes Road Synagogue, the last of three red brick buildings.

9. A symbol of taste and wealth

Princes Road Synagogue

Here is another religious building for a particular community. This is Princes Road Synagogue, built in 1874 for Jews from Eastern Europe who had settled in Liverpool. In the nineteenth century, there had been anti-Jewish riots throughout the Russian Empire – particularly in Poland and the Ukraine. Thousands of Jewish people left their homes and moved to Western Europe or the United States.

Like the German Lutherans we heard about earlier, many Jews heading to America stopped in Liverpool. Rather than continue their journey, some chose to stay in Liverpool and joined the existing Jewish community.

Princes Road Synagogue
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

Although most of the Jews in Liverpool are Ashkenazi Jews, originating from Eastern Europe, this synagogue was built in the style favoured by Sephardic Jews from Spain and North Africa. This is because in the mid-nineteenth century there was a craze for all things Oriental. The building is designed in a style called 'Moorish Revival' and includes features typical of Ottoman Turkey and Andalucía in Spain. Look out for the golden St David star above the door. The synagogue's tall towers used to be the bases for minarets, or domes, similar to ones we might see on a mosque. Liverpool's Jewish community wanted to show off their wealth and sophistication.

These days, the synagogue is attended only on Sabbath mornings and holidays, though the descendants of former members sometimes come from Manchester or London to hold weddings or bar mitzvah celebrations.

Princes Road Synagogue is one of the finest synagogues in Europe. It was the first synagogue outside of London to receive Grade I listed status and has become a model for synagogue building around the world. The spectacular interior of the building is also well worth a visit. Tours are available by appointment.

Country links - Poland, Spain, Turkey, Ukraine

Directions 9 - When you are ready, cross Princes Road and stop outside the Kuumba Imani Millennium Centre building.

10. Creativity and faith

Kuumba Imani Millennium Centre

Across from the synagogue is another building serving one of Liverpool's immigrant communities – the Kuumba Imani Millennium Centre. Kuumba and Imani are Swahili words which mean 'creativity' and 'faith'. The Swahili language is spoken across East Africa and is the official language of Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda. The name was chosen by local children who attend an after-school club in the building.

Community centres like these help immigrants who arrive in the city to find homes, jobs and services. This centre was established by the Liverpool Black Sisters, a charity formed by local women to support women and families from Liverpool's black communities.

Kuumba Imani Millennium Centre detail
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

The Sisters were founded in the early 1970s to provide after-school childcare for working families. Today, the centre also offers the local community office space, IT training facilities and a counselling service.

The Kuumba Imani centre is one of the latest signs of Liverpool's large and diverse black population. The city is home to 9,000 people of Black African origin and 4,000 people with a Caribbean background. In fact, the black community in Liverpool is the oldest in Britain, dating to at least the 1730s. Many early black settlers in the city were sailors and the children of overseas merchants who were sent to school in England. Around the corner on Upper Stanhope Street, you will see various shops that cater for Liverpool's black communities.

Country links - Kenya, Tanzania, Uganda

Directions 10 - Retrace your steps a short way up Princes Road then turn left into Upper Stanhope Street. Take the first right into Berkley Street. Stop outside the Greek Orthodox Church of St Nicholas.

11. A Greek church in Turkish style

St Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church

Our next stop shows how Liverpool is also home to immigrants from the East Mediterranean – in this case, Greeks and Greek Cypriots. A large number of Greeks arrived in Liverpool in 1821 after Turks massacred Greek people on the island of Chios. There were other waves of immigration in later years and today Liverpool is home to about 2,500 Greek Cypriots. Another 3,000 Greeks live in nearby Wirral and North Wales.

This church was the second purpose-built Greek Orthodox Church in England. When it was completed in 1870, it was dedicated to St Nicholas, the patron saint of seafarers.

Greek Orthodox Church of St Nicholas
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

As we heard at the synagogue this was a period when Oriental style architecture was fashionable. Here the Greek community chose to build in the Byzantine style. Byzantine style is an elaborate form of Roman architecture that originated from the Byzantine empire. This empire was centred on Constantinople, which is now Istanbul in Turkey. The most well-known Byzantine style religious building in Britain is Westminster Cathedral in London.

The exterior of St Nicholas Church is extremely ornate, featuring arches within arches in alternating bands of white stone and red brick. There is a row of three domes on the portico, and a fourth dome over the nave, all raised on drums. The interior, with white marble columns and Byzantine capitals, is surprisingly plain by comparison.

This decision to build a Greek church in Byzantine style was quite unusual. At the time this church was being constructed, many of other large public buildings in Liverpool – and cities throughout Britain – were being designed in the style of the ancient Greek empire.

Country links - Cyprus, Greece, Turkey

Directions 11 - A few metres beyond the Greek Church, the road becomes a pedestrian space. Stop by a circular mural in the paving stones.

12. A city united

Faith In One City plaque

On our walk so far we have heard about various immigrant communities who came to Liverpool during the industrial boom of the nineteenth century. Immigration continued in the twentieth century. Since the Second World War, immigrants have come to Liverpool from Africa, the Caribbean and Southern Asia. The shops around this square and the goods for sale give some indication of the different communities that live in this neighbourhood.

This area of Liverpool is called Toxteth. It was hit very hard by the city's economic decline after the Second World War. Sadly, the name is now synonymous with riots that engulfed the district in 1981.

The Faith in One City plaque
Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

Many factors led to the rioting, including high unemployment, poverty and racism. After hard work by city authorities and community groups, the area is now peaceful and multicultural.

In 2004, Liverpool's cultural and religious diversity was celebrated in a year-long programme of projects and events called 'Faith in One City'. Their aim was to bring Liverpool's religious communities together. As part of this programme, a plaque was unveiled here that celebrates some of Liverpool's religious communities. It looks a little like a ship's wheel and is inscribed with the words from Psalm 33 verse 6: "Behold how good and joyful a thing it is brethren to dwell together in unity!"

Look closely and we can see figures showing people in a circle around the world. Look as well for the names of eight religions. Judaism and Christianity originated in present-day Israel and Palestine. Islam originates in Saudi Arabia. Buddhism, Hinduism and Sikhism began in India. The Baha'i faith has its origins in Iran. The Rastafarian faith originates from Jamaica. Each one of these faiths has members in Liverpool who have settled here from across the world. Liverpool is certainly a modern multi-faith city.

Stop at number 64, a three-storey building with a green door.

13. The centre of the community

The Nigeria Centre

Back in Princes Street, we saw a community centre for East African immigrants. Here is a West African community centre, specifically for Nigerians. Many Christian Nigerians worship a little further along the road at St James in the City church.

Liverpool has one of the largest and oldest Nigerian communities in Britain. Liverpool's relationship with Nigeria can be traced to the seventeenth century when the British imported goods such as cocoa, rubber and palm oil from Nigeria to Liverpool. Nigeria was also one of many African countries affected by the slave trade. We will hear more about slavery a little later in the walk.

Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain / Wikimedia Commons

There are several other community associations in the neighbouring streets including the Merseyside Caribbean Centre on Amberley Street, the Liverpool Somali Community Centre in Granby Street and the Pakistan Youth and Community Centre on Mulgrave Street. The Pakistani centre caters for members of the Muslim community.

Liverpool was actually one of the first British cities to have a place of worship for Muslims. In 1887, a lawyer who had converted to Islam – William Abdullah Quilliam – opened a mosque in a terraced house on East Danby Road. That no longer exists, but there have been purpose-built mosques constructed more recently. The Al-Rahma masjid on nearby Hatherley Street is the oldest of three Muslim mosques in Liverpool. It was built in 1965 and has been extended over time as the city's Muslim population has grown. Today the Al-Rahma masjid has facilities for up to 2,500 worshippers.

Directions 13 - Continue along Upper Parliament Street then cross over and turn right into St James Road. Take the steps up into the grounds of Liverpool Cathedral. Keep the Cathedral on your right and stop outside the front entrance.

To avoid the steps - continue along St James Road. Pass the bollards and bear right into the cathedral car park. Follow the signs to the front entrance.

14. A towering landmark

Liverpool Cathedral

Liverpool is unusual in that it has two cathedrals. Earlier we saw the Metropolitan Cathedral built for the Irish Catholic community. This is the Cathedral Church of Christ which was built for the city's Anglicans. Ironically, the designer of the Anglican cathedral was a Catholic while the designer of the Catholic cathedral was an Anglican!

The two cathedrals are quite different. This one was built in a Gothic Revival style. The term 'gothic' describes elaborate buildings made from the twelfth century onwards in southern European countries such as France, Italy and Germany. Gothic Revival describes a building design that imitates these styles.

Gothic Revival design makes the cathedral look imposing and also much older than it really is. Construction actually began in 1902 and the work was officially completed in 1978. It is the largest cathedral in Britain and the fifth largest in the world.

Rory Walsh © RGS-IBG Discovering Britain

Look up at the cathedral tower that dominates the city skyline. At 331 feet tall – or over 100 metres – it is one of the world's tallest church towers. It is called the Vestey Tower after two Liverpool businessmen, William and Edward Vestey, who helped fund the building work. In 1897, these brothers founded the Union Cold Storage Company. The company imported meat and dairy products from America, eggs and poultry from Russia and kept these goods fresh in freezer ships. Known as Blue Star, they became one of the most famous shipping lines in the world. As the company expanded, they opened cold storage shops throughout the world including France, Russia, America, China and South Africa.

Directions 14 - Go through the main entrance and inside the cathedral. Stop a little way past the porch.

15. Sculptures and soldiers

Liverpool Cathedral

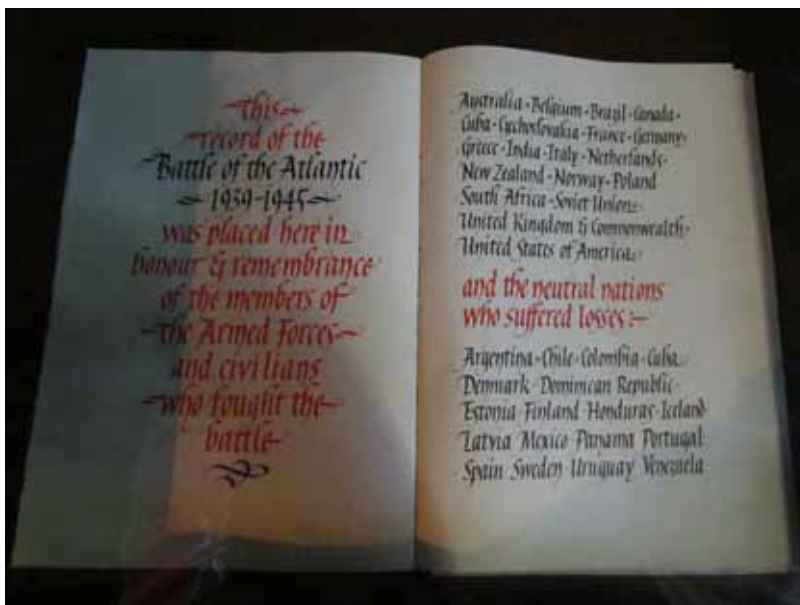

Like the Metropolitan Cathedral we visited earlier, the inside of this cathedral provides us with more international connections. The oldest part of the cathedral is the Lady Chapel, which was consecrated in 1910. Here we can find a fifteenth century wooden statue of the Virgin Mary called 'Kneeling Madonna'. It was made by Italian artist Giovanni Della Robbia. The statue was probably part of a set of nativity figures and in 2002 the Cathedral commissioned a figure of the baby Jesus to accompany it.

Outside the Cathedral shop is a sculpture called 'Holy Family'. The artist was Josefina de Vasconcellos, a Brazilian sculptor who created many pieces for churches and cathedrals. Josefina worked throughout her life, and became the world's oldest working sculptor when she accepted a commission at the age of 96!

Also in the Cathedral we can find various war memorials. War memorials in churches usually commemorate parishioners who gave their lives in conflicts at home or overseas, so they can be an interesting way to find international links in your local area.

In Liverpool Cathedral is the War Memorial Chapel. This houses the Roll of Honour that records the men from Liverpool who died in the First World War. Over 40,000 Liverpool men lost their lives in the trenches of France and Belgium. There are also Second World War memorials. Liverpool was a major military port and the chapel has a book of remembrance listing 38 countries affected by the Battle of the Atlantic.

Take your time to explore the interior of this incredible building. On your way around, you might discover something that looks rather out of place – an old telephone box. The cathedral's architect, Giles Gilbert Scott, was just 22 when he won the international competition to design this building. Later in his career he designed the K2, K3 and iconic K6 red telephone boxes – that's why we can see one in here.

16. Oriental connections

Chinese arch, Nelson Street

This huge arch now takes our story of multicultural Liverpool to the other side of the world. The arch was built in 1999 to celebrate Liverpool being twinned with Shanghai in China. But it is also a symbol of a much longer relationship between Liverpool and China dating back to 1834. This was when the first ever Chinese ship arrived at Liverpool docks carrying a cargo of Chinese silk and cotton. From this journey a major trading partnership grew.

By the late 1850s, a company called the Blue Funnel Line ran ships between China and Liverpool importing cotton, silk and tea. They employed many Chinese sailors and built homes for them beside the docks. Some of these sailors settled in the city.

As a result, Liverpool has the oldest Chinese population in Europe. By the 1890s, the first Chinese shops and businesses had set up and by the start of the Second World War there were 20,000 Chinese sailors in Liverpool.

This arch is over 13 metres high, making it the largest Chinese arch in Europe. It marks the entrance to the area south of the city centre known as Chinatown. This thriving district has a range of Chinese businesses, shops and restaurants. Look out for Chinese street signs, even Chinese writing on the parking meters! There is a Chinese community association and a Chinese Gospel Church a little further down on Upper Pitt Street. Liverpool's trade relationship with China is still going strong. Liverpool was the only British city represented at the 2010 Shanghai World Expo.

Directions 16 - Continue down Nelson Street. Take your time to enjoy the sights, sounds and smells of Chinatown. Turn right onto St James Street. Stop at the mini roundabout with Jamaica Street.

17. Slavery and sugar

Jamaica Street

The first stop on our walk was a Welsh street name. Here we are at another revealing street name. Jamaica Street recalls Liverpool's historical links with the West Indies. Two products from Jamaica came through Liverpool's docks – sugar and rum. But a third link between Liverpool and Jamaica was neither sweet nor refreshing.

Britain seized Jamaica in 1655 and in time it became Britain's largest colony in the West Indies. Jamaica became central to the slave trade. Ships set sail from Liverpool to West Africa. There they picked up a cargo of people from countries including present-day Senegal, The Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Guinea, Sierra Leone, Liberia, Cote d'Ivoire and Ghana.

They were then transported across the Atlantic to Caribbean islands such as Jamaica, Trinidad, Barbados and the Leeward Islands, as well as British Guyana. Enslaved people were sold in exchange for goods such as rum and sugar, which were then brought back to Liverpool. This was known as the slave triangle.

Many Liverpool merchants were involved in the slave trade. By the end of the 1700s, Liverpool controlled over 80 per cent of the British slave trade and over 40 per cent in the whole of Europe. The profits from the slave trade made Liverpool a very wealthy city. Altogether, nearly one and a half million Africans were forcibly transported across the Atlantic in Liverpool ships. You can find out more about Liverpool's involvement in the slave trade at the International Slavery Museum in the Albert Dock.

Some of the West African and West Indian community in Liverpool today can trace their roots back ten generations to the era of the slave trade.

Directions 17 - Continue along the left hand side of St James Street, which becomes Park Lane. At the corner with Cornhill stop by the red brick church with a row of flags on the wall.

18. An octagonal church

Gustav Adolfs Kyrka

Here we come to our last example of an immigrant community who have left their mark on Liverpool in the form of a religious building. This is the Gustav Adolfs Kyrka, or the Swedish Seaman's Church. Like the Irish, German and Jewish communities that we have already heard about, many Scandinavians arrived in Liverpool en route to America but chose to settle here rather than crossing the Atlantic. Other Swedes were sailors working on the ships that brought timber from Sweden and the Baltic to Liverpool. The Baltic Fleet pub – a favourite watering hole of these sailors – is nearby at the bottom of Cornhill.

By the 1880s, up to 50,000 Scandinavians were passing through Liverpool every year so this church was built for them. It was completed in 1884. It was the first Swedish church built outside Sweden and is one of only four octagonal churches in Britain. The design also includes some distinctive Scandinavian features. Look for the stepped walls and the concave-sided spire. The church is now a Grade II listed building.

The church is still used by the Scandinavian community in Liverpool. It is home to the Liverpool International Nordic Community, known as LiNC. LiNC's activities support and promote all of Liverpool's Scandinavian people including those from Sweden, Norway, Iceland, Finland and Denmark. You can see all their flags hanging outside.

Directions 18 - Continue along Park Lane until you reach a triangle of open ground on the right hand side just before the junction with Paradise Street. Stop in the small gardens.

19. A story of movement and migration

St Thomas' Memorial Garden

We've now reached the end of our walk. And this garden is perhaps a fitting place to stop after we have learned about the many different ethnic and religious communities that live harmoniously in Liverpool today.

This garden is a memorial to one of Liverpool's oldest church communities. St Thomas's church was consecrated in 1750, making it the third oldest in Liverpool. But by 1905 the church had closed and the land was redeveloped. More recently, this triangle has been created on the site of the church to mark this lost Liverpool community. Today it is a little oasis on the edge of Liverpool city centre. The garden illustrates how Liverpool's population has constantly evolved and changed along with the city itself.

And like many of the city's people, many of the plants and flowers in the garden have come from overseas. Lavender, for example, originated in the Azores, Canary Islands and Madeira before spreading across the Mediterranean to the Middle East and South Asia.

This walk has been a story of movement and migration. Liverpool's closeness to Wales and Ireland helped to build the city and fill the new streets with workers. Liverpool's slave ships plied their triangle trade between West Africa and the Caribbean. Germans and Scandinavians en route to America chose to settle in Liverpool rather than cross the Atlantic. Eastern Europeans and Greeks found refuge from oppression in Liverpool. Liverpool has had a long association with China. The city is home to more recent migrants from Nigeria, Pakistan and Somalia.

Each of the communities that settled in Liverpool brought their own culture, religion and language. One of the best ways of seeing their impact on the landscape of the city today is through their religious buildings and community associations. We've also heard about the overseas musicians who filled the Philharmonic Hall with new sounds from around the world, international artists whose works are on display in Liverpool's churches, and foreign architectural styles that have been copied here in Liverpool.

Our journey through Liverpool's streets has been a journey across the globe, discovering how Liverpool has been shaped by people from across the world.

On the way we have found evidence of links to over 70 of the 206 Olympic and Paralympic participating nations. Maybe you spotted more. If you did, please let us know. And if you enjoyed this walk, look on the Walk the World website and you will find more in different parts of Britain that you can try. Why not think about creating your own walk?

Country links - Portugal, Spain

Directions 19 - From St Thomas's Memorial Garden you can turn left to go to Albert Dock or right to the central shopping area.

To return to Lime Street station, continue ahead to the junction with Liver Street. Take the road that bears right and join Hanover Street. Turn right and continue along Hanover Street which becomes Ranelagh Street, which you passed near the start of the walk. Turn left at the end and retrace your way along Lime Street. The station will be on the right after the Adelphi Hotel.
